> Alfalfa and Orchard Grass. In sowing a few acres of alfalfa I had to cross a knoll of newly broken up shale nearly an eighth of an acre in extent, and, feeling sure no alfalfa would grow on such a seed bed of almost pure gravel and shale, with a very small per cent of soil and a shale rock beneath, I sowed a lot of mixed grass seed over it, consisting of the clovers, timothy, redtop and orchard grass. Of course I sowed the alfalfa over that as over the rest of the field. The clovers, timothy and redtop never showed, but to my surprise the knoll seemed to be just adapted to alfalfa and orchard grass, and I have a splendid stand of these plants. At this time we use tye for soiling, but I find by orchard grass give considerably more of a better quality and possibly more digestible.-L. W. Lighty in National

Superstition of the Turks,

The superstition of the Turks is nowhere so apparent as in their fear of the "evil eye." Jugs placed around the edge of the roof or an old shoe filled with garlic and blue beets (blue glass balls or rings) is a sure guard against the illusion. Whenever a pretty child is playing upon the street the passersby will say, "Oh, what an ugly child!" for fear of inciting the evil spirit against its beauty. The peasant classes in Turkey are of course the most superstitious because they are the most ignorate. They have no education whatever and can neither read nor
